There is a well-defined split in the former united Jewish congregation in Westerly, and, as a result there is a feeling almost bordering on hatred among some of the members of both factions, and this is especially the case between Charles Goldberg and Louis Deutch, as was indicated in the testimony given in the Third district court, before Judge Oliver H. Williams, Friday. Deutch is of the faction that holds the fort in the synagogue in Canal street, which is also utilized as a Jewish school. Sunday, March Saccording to the evidence, Goldberg went into the synagogue while the school was in session, to get his praywent into the synagogue while the school was in session, to get his prayer shawl, a candlestick, which his father-in-law had presented the synagogue, and some books he claims he paid for to be used by his son, who attended the school before the break in the congregation. Goldberg gathered in these articles and was about to leave the synagogue with them when he was intercepted by Deutch, and informed that he had no right to remove them, and would not be porand informed that he had no right to remove them, and would not be permitted to take them away. According to Goldberg this interception took place just after Deutch had fastened the door, but Deutch denied fastening the door. Then, according to Deutch, Goldberg dropped the books, the prayer shawl and the candlestick and then struck him a terrific blow in the mouth, forced him against a window, breaking the glass, knocked him down and struck him.

Goldberg told the court that Deutch, after fastening the door, and challeng-

Goldberg told the court that Deutch, after fastening the door, and challenging his right to take his belongings, struck the first blow, and that he then struck Deutch. Goldberg said Deutch came at him as if he thought he could best him, but found he was mistaken. Goldberg told the court that "never in God's world," did he apply a ville epithet to Deutch or declare that he would kill him.

So far as the testimony divulged, Deutch received a cut lip and bruised side, while the knuckles of Goldberg's right hand were cut. Both sought medical attention, and each was intent on having the other fellow arrested, making complaint by telephone. Deutch got his complaint in first and Goldberg was arrested on the charge of assault. He was released on bond and the case came to trial Friday. Goldberg was adjusted guilty and ordered to pay a fine of $20 and costs. There were representatives of both factions in court and one man who was of the in court and one man who was of the same faction with Goldberg, infringed upon the court's dignity and respect nd was sharply reprimanded by Judge

It is an old game for the police offi-cers of Westerly to drive undesirable persons over the river into Pawea-tuck and vice versa. The new day patrolman in Pawcatuck warned a onelegged itinerant out of the village and
